If you are looking forward to the built-in camera of the Apple Watch 2 to function as a Wi-Fi connected remote control for your iOS devices - the photo editor literally fits in your pocket! The whole workflow centered around one app alone is a maze. What I like most about this combination, however, is the simplicity of not having to switch between different apps one after another. Instead, Photoshop Sketch allows me to scan an image, edit it, optimize it in a few buttons inside the app, and then choose my preferred destination for uploading the creations. I find it easier to work with the Apple Pencil - even though I have over a thousand images in my catalog - compared to the eraser-like stylus. The improvements that I see in Lightroom 5 are many. Sometimes, you need a new way of doing things. For example, as a professional photographer, I still regret that I had to use an old and out-of-date version of Lightroom for so many years. Chatting with many photographers, the problem for them was not Lightroom's buggy UI; it was that they did not use Lightroom. One of the biggest issues with my customers was not being able to work on images in the camera raw or in both the camera raw and digital negatives in the same app at the same time. They wanted to search for their images or move them between albums in Lightroom and work on them. This took up to 30 minutes or more, even with Photoshop or the browser. Lightroom 5 is indeed simpler in terms of workflow. You won't be using RAW files much, but if you do, you may be able to edit and save them here. You will open images in the RAW or Digital Negative format in Photoshop Sketch and apply this editing in this app. This lets you work on both your RAW and Digital Negative content at the same time. It is convenient. Another big change to note here is that many times, you used the keyboard shortcuts to control your workflow in Lightroom. It is no longer the case in the new Lightroom 5, as it supports the new gestures-based OS. As a result, users can do more quickly without the need to think about where to press and where to hold their fingers if they are using the iOS 10 system.
