For my work, I will have to stick it at ACR, and I will continue to use the iOS native Camera app when I need it. No use being forced to purchase an iPad Pro. I would save $1,000 for that iPad Pro, tho, if I didn't need my iPad for other things as well. I recently switched to Photoshop CC and have been using it for a few months. I work exclusively in the Photoshop app and have no need for Lightroom on my iPad. This year I decided to make the move and I have been very happy. Due to the limitations of the iPad Pro screen size, portability is something that CC has really nailed it on. Because I am about a year into using it, I will not comment on performance because I have not had any issues. I will say that the app looks fantastic on the iPad Pro, even though I am not a full-time mobile user (or even semi-mobile user), and it is very responsive.

I started to make a slide for my friend but I think that it can be more convincing if I off black the canvas and remove the background. Since I don't know the size of the canvas I am going to remove the background with Topaz Studio, a free and open-source photo software with a Windows program. When I open the file, it automatically provides options for three ways to remove the background: Background Removal, Fuzzy Fill, and Photoshop File. When I use the option Background Removal, I am going to remove the background with Effect: Pixelate. I will set the Auto Mask option to Apply. I will choose Angle in the set to 15 degrees. When I brush over the area that I want to convert to black, the Red Channel is removed. Over each area I will use Shift + Ctrl + - to invert the Red channel.

PROJECT LOCK: In the past, you had used Photoshop in unlimited ways, but sharing projects was a headache because of the lack of control over the image's ownership. The new Project Locking feature allows users to share projects with a unique URL, and a viewer can view, edit, and make changes with the key held by the user and secured between them.
